Transfer/Readmission Applicants

Kenrick School of Theology accepts for admission students who transfer from another graduate-level theologate. Such students are required to supply a favorable recommendation from the administration and faculty of the sending institution. The determination of transfer credit is made by the Academic Dean, in consultation with the student and, if necessary, with the officers of the sending institution. Ordinarily Kenrick requires that transfer students be in residence at the Kenrick-Glennon campus for at least two years before the administration and faculty will recommend them to their sponsoring ordinary for ordination.

Applicants who have previously left another seminary and after a period of time are making application to this seminary may be admitted to Kenrick School of Theology after Kenrick has first consulted with members of the staff of the former seminary. Each case is considered according to the circumstances and situation of the student at the time of his application. Kenrick reserves the right to consult former members of the administration or faculty of the other seminary, former ordinaries or vocation directors who have worked with the candidates, or any other persons the situation may suggest.

The admission process of an applicant who has previously been in the Kenrick-Glennon program is the same as for those who are seeking admission for the first time. Kenrick-Glennon Seminary does not have a “sabbatical” or “on-leave” designation for students who leave the program.

For more information on the transfer of credit or special situations, refer to Appendix A, “Policy for the Transfer of Credit and for the Granting of Advanced Standing”.
